FALDA

Andreas Kowalewski

The designer

Andreas Kowalewski is a designer, artisan and entrepreneur. He believes that innovation in today's design is caused by technologies, sophisticated ways of using construction materials and advanced principles. Andreas Kowalewski is continually seeking purity of line and detail as well as the perfection of well-made objects. His ambition is to create new solutions through a critical design process, to reinterpret and to improve. His work covers the spectrum of experimental artistic approaches, including industrial design and interaction with the user.

Having finished his carpentry apprenticeship, he studied at Folkwang University in Essen, from which he obtained a Masters in industrial design. Since then he has developed products and lighting for a number of leading companies in the field of design, such as Philips Design, Ligne Roset and Miyazaki.

Description

It is the base, airy and seemingly sculpted, made from lacquered steel to match the top, which is the source of all Falda's originality.
