HAMPTON

Éric Jourdan

The designer

Raised in an artistic environment, Eric Jourdan was very influenced by his architect father.

Architecture influences Eric Jourdan's work, regardless of whether he is designing furniture or seating. He does not consider that he has a culture of furniture or technical knowledge of design. His approach is more detached than that. He likes organic forms, for what characterises him is his design, very soft and flowing. He loves curves, never lifting his pencil from the page.

The concept

Hampton is a real homage to the great American architect Mies Van der Rohe (who designed the Seagram Building in New York's Park Avenue).

Combining glass with solid wood brings both transparency and modernity.

"When I design furniture, my greatest hope is to transpose ideas from architecture. In the case of Hampton, I was clearly influenced by Eric can be considered as a classical type of designer. For him, design serves to embellish life, making one's living conditions more positive.

In his work, he is very inspired by the post-war period, evoking by turns architects such as George Nelson, Edwin Lutyens and Le Corbusier. But it is really Mies Van der Rohe who is evoked in this new collection of furniture in solid wood and glass.

the sublime Farnsworth House, designed by Mies Van Der Rohe.

One can see the combination of cherry wood and glass just as much in the architecture of the house as in the construction of this piece of furniture."

With regard to colour, we have blue, "which gives energy" and pink, "more incongruous, different, almost POP," Eric Jourdan tells us.
